Chapter 13

MEMORANDUM OF DECISION ON MOTION FOR ORDER DIRECTING
TRUSTEE TO PAY OVER TO DAVID
DOBBS THE MONEY DUE HIM

Date: July 26, 2006
Time: 10:00 a.m.
Courtroom: 5B

This is the motion of judgment creditor David Dobbs directing the Chapter 13 Trustee to pay over to him the amount of his judicially determined lien from remaining proceeds after close of escrow in the sale of the property commonly known as 66 Coral Lake, Irvine ("the property"). This sale was approved upon motion of the Debtors under 11 U.S.C. § 363(f) with liens attaching to proceeds.

Earlier, the Court on June 20, 2006 had heard Debtors' motion under 11 U.S.C. Section 522(f) to avoid the Dobbs lien as impairing the Debtors' homestead. The Court

1 determined that the Dobbs lien would be avoided to the extent that it exceeded
2 $252,008.56, as reflected in the court's order entered July 7, 2006. This determination
3 was made as follows: 1. The senior mortgage was found to have had a balance of 4 $397,718 as of the petition date; 2. The first judgment lien was found to have had a
5 balance of $12,566.07 as of the petition date; 3. The property was found to have had a
6 fair market value of $815,000 as of the petition date; and 4. The Debtors claimed a
7 $150,000 exemption, which was not contested. As guided by the statute and established
8 law, the Court added the amounts of the senior, unavoidable liens (including a $2,707.37 9 tax lien) plus the $150,000 homestead, and the sum of these numbers ($562,991.44)
10 was then subtracted from the determined fair market value as of the petition date, 11 $815,000. The resulting number was $252,008. 56, which is the amount of the Dobbs 12 lien not avoided because it did not impair the homestead under this formula ("remaining 13 Dobbs lien").

14
15
16 There are not enough proceeds left after senior liens and various and sundry costs
17 of escrow to pay both the full exemption and the full amount of the remaining Dobbs lien.
18 This should not surprise anyone. Upon review of the closing statement, Exhibit "2" to the 19 Debtors' opposition papers, it develops that the amount of the first mortgage payoff to 20 Countrywide was actually $429,307.71, an increase of $31,589 from the amount
21 determined as of date of petition. Why this lien is so much higher is not clarified, but if it
22 is, as the Court believes, because the mortgage has not been regularly paid then 23 certainly Debtors cannot expect someone else to have paid for this. Similarly, there is a 24 $48,000 broker's commission, and over $6,400 in other sundry costs deducted from 25 proceeds, which were never calculated when the amount of the remaining Dobbs lien 26
27
28

1 was determined in the section 522(f) motion. The motion at bar highlights a basic issue.
2 Who pays for costs of sale and post petition changes in the amounts of senior liens, the 3 homestead or the unavoidable portion of the judgment lien after a section 522(f) order?
4 Since the determination of senior amounts and the unavoidable portion of a target lien
5 are all determined under section 522(f) as of the petition date, See, 11 U.S.C. §
6 522(a)(2); In re Goswami, 304 B.R. 386, 391-92 (9th Cir. BAP 2003), it is inevitable that 7 the actual amounts paid in a later sale will differ, but the question is, who bears the risk of 8 these changes?
9

10 The Court concludes that it is the exemption that must absorb these costs. First,
11 the definition of what is meant by a lien "impairing" an exemption found at 11 U.S.C.
12 522(f)(2)(A) addresses other liens and the amount of the debtor's exemption, but notably 13 absent is any reference to costs of sale or post determination changes in the amount of 14 senior liens. In other words, at a fixed point in time liens are avoided to the extent they 15 impair exemptions, not to the extent they impair exemptions and possible future costs of 16 sale. Second, there is ample case law which forbids the Court from considering costs of 17 sale when determining "fair market value" in the context of a section 522(f) motion. See,
18 In re Nellis, 12 B.R. 770, 773 (Bankr. Conn. 1981); In re Clendennen, 67 B.R. 909
19 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1986); In re Anderson, 68 B.R. 313,314 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1986); In re
20 Richardson, 280 B.R. 717 (Bankr. S.D. Ala. 2001.) It must logically follow, then, that the 21 resulting number for the unavoidable portion of an involuntary lien must be somewhat 22 larger than would be yielded upon immediate sale if costs of sale are also deducted from 23 the lien. To nevertheless deduct costs of sale then from the lien is illogical. Stated 24 differently, leaving the exemption untouched despite the incurrence of costs of sale or 25
26
27
28

1 other deductions would only make sense if these items could be considered in the initial
2 analysis. Third, logic dictates that since it is the exemption (or to the Debtors beyond 3 their exemption) that would enjoy any post determination appreciation of the property,
4 See, Anderson, 68 B.R. at 314, it is also the exemption which should suffer any post
5 determination depreciation or changes in the amounts of senior liens. It also follows that 6 costs of sale should be absorbed by the exemption since it is the debtor who decides 7 when, or if, any sale of the property is to occur, and at what price, and/or whether a
8 broker is to be retained and on what terms. To attempt a determination under section 9 522(f) that would fix the exemption but leave all these other potential deductions and 10 variables such as hypothetical costs of sale or changes in the amount of senior liens in 11 flux, would be illogical and unwieldy. Lastly, to the extent the diminishment of the 12 proceeds remaining is attributable to the Debtors' failure to service their mortgage, they 13 have no one to blame but themselves for this result. Certainly they cannot reasonably 14 expect that their secured creditor should, effectively, pay their costs of occupancy by 15 paying the full amount of an exemption from the diminished proceeds left after the 16 enlarged senior is paid in full.

17
18
19
20 Debtors' citation to Bernstein v. Pavich (In re Pavich), 191 B.R. 838 (Bankr. E.D.
21 Ca. 1996), is not persuasive. Pavich did not involve a judicially determined amount of 22 lien after section 522(f) motion. Rather, Pavich involved a priority dispute between 23 claimants over proceeds remaining after the court had ordered a sale free of liens with 24 liens attaching to remaining proceeds. The Pavich court never fully explains the general 25 proposition stated in its opinion that exemptions are paid before involuntary liens and 26 therefore judicial liens cannot "impair" a homestead. Id. at 846. Of course, involuntary 27
28

1 liens would impair homestead exemptions in certain circumstances as is discussed in 2 many cases. See, In re Patterson, 139 B.R. 229, 231 (9th Cir. BAP 1992); In re Kruger, 3 77 B.R. 785, 788 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1987). To suggest otherwise would be to render 4 section 522(f) unnecessary in most cases involving residential real estate. The reliance
5 of the Pavich court on In re Chabot, 992 F. 2d 891 (9th Cir. 1993) exposes the dubious
6 reliability of Pavich as precedent. The holding of Chabot, i.e., that judgment liens do not 7 even attach to the extent there is no equity above declared homestead exemptions is 8 factually distinguishable. Here we have an "automatic" homestead, not a declared
9 homestead, and clearly here some of the Dobbs lien must have attached since the senior 10 liens plus the full homestead did not fully eclipse the property value. Moreover, the 11 Chabot holding that post-petition appreciation would inure to the benefit of avoided liens, 12 has been challenged as having been overruled by changes in the Code. See, In re
13 Nielson, 197 B.R. 665, n. 3 (9th Cir BAP 1996). The other cases cited in Pavich, such as 14 In re Galvan, 110 B.R. 446 (9th Cir. BAP 1990), overruled by In re Chabot, 992 F.2d 891
15 (9th Cir. 1993), overruled by 1994 Bankruptcy Reform Act 303 and In re Patterson, 139
16 B.R. at 231 do not cast light on our issue because they do not discuss the pivotal issues
17 of costs of sale or accruing charges on senior liens. However, the methodologies 18 described in those cases for a section 522(f) determination are in all ways consistent with 19 this Court's approach herein. Moreover, the reference by the Pavich court to judicial liens
20 is largely dicta since the Pavich court went on to hold that certain tax liens would be paid
21 in any event eclipsing the exemption. Pavich, 191 B.R. at 847. In sum, there is nothing 22 about Pavich which can overcome the clear weight of authority and common sense as 23 described hereinabove.
24
25
26
27
28

1 At the hearing there was argument to the effect that under CAL. CIV. PROC. § 2 701.850, full homestead exemptions plus all existing encumbrances are paid by the 3 levying officer. Therefore, Debtors argue, the Court should order payment in full of their 4 homestead exemption before the remaining Dobbs lien because, for purposes of 5 homestead exemptions, bankruptcies are treated as involuntary sales. See, In re Pike, 6 243 B.R. 66, 70 (9th Cir. BAP 1999).
7

8 First, CAL. CIV. PROC. § 701.850 cannot be read as Debtors have suggested. At 9 most, it could be argued that under California law, homestead properties cannot be sold 10 by the levying officer at all unless at a price sufficient to clear all liens and encumbrances 11 plus the homestead. See, CAL. CIV. PROC. §§ 704.760, 704.780 and 704.800.
12

13 Debtors are mixing figurative "apples and oranges." While the petition is indeed 14 treated as the equivalent of a forced sale for limited purposes of determining that 15 California's automatic homestead exemption applies, it does not follow that California's 16 protection against involuntary sale should also apply insofar as homestead exemptions 17 thereunder must emerge unscathed. No case law suggests that the operation of the 18 bankruptcy must exactly mimic the operation of a hypothetical sheriff's sale under 19 California law. This pushes the analogy to an involuntary sale too far. Nor is the analogy 20 a logical one, as there is no assurance that the costs of sale through an escrow, such as 21 in the case at bar, would be anywhere near the same as the reimbursement of the costs 22 of a levying officer as referenced at CAL. CIV. PROC. § 704.850(a)(3). Further, the 23 analogy to a sheriff's sale becomes even more remote since the California Code of Civil 24 Procedure scheme suggests that accruing amounts under the senior lien must not be 25 allowed to become a major factor since sales can only be ordered in the first place where 26
27
28

1 all liens and encumbrances plus the full exemption do not exceed the expected price.
2 See, CAL. CIV. PROC. §§ 704.750 - 704.800.

3 Moreover, section 522(f) is designed to deal with realities of the petition having 4 actually been filed. It therefore no longer makes any sense to further analogize the 5 petition to a sheriff's sale under a state statute that would not have allowed the sale at all
6 under the facts of this case where liens and encumbrances, plus the full exemption,
7 exceeded the value of the property. Instead, section 522(f) is designed to do what no 8 state statute can do, that is, to bifurcate liens that impair homesteads and retain only that 9 part that does not impair the exemption. Nor does it follow that a sale conducted in 10 bankruptcy, or after the bankruptcy has been pending many months, should be treated 11 as a second forced sale, particularly where, as here, the Debtors have already had one 12 determination of their exemption. Instead, it is more logical under section 522(f), and 13 consistent with case law, that the petition is the "forced sale" since all values and lien 14 amounts are examined as of that date. That is as far as the analogy can go. The 15 amount of an involuntary lien impairing the homestead is adjusted as of that date and 16 only the portion of the target lien after the senior liens plus the homestead remains as of 17 the petition date. It is then totally illogical to again readjust the lien just because Debtors 18 decide to sell their residence months or even years later, particularly where, as here, all 19 of the senior amounts have changed, the price has changed, and the additional factor of 20 costs must be dealt with.

21 In effect, once the section 522(f) determination was made this case became no 22 different than if the amount of the lien were $252,008.56 and voluntary in nature (and 23 thus not further avoidable as impairing the homestead). Once the section 522(f)
24
25
26
27
28

1 determination is made, the target lien should not equitably be subjected to repeated
2 examination, particularly where, as here, it is the Debtors' decision not to service the 3 senior mortgage yet remain in residence and where the sale is conducted only for the 4 benefit of the Debtors. In such a case of a voluntary lien there could be no reasonable 5 argument that the lienor should be made to absorb the costs of sale or any of the other 6 charges involved here.
7

8 Grant motion instructing Trustee to remit full amount of Dobbs lien, $252,008.56.
